When some of my classmates and I decided to nominate Jacqueline for the Très Bien Award, we all knew her to be silent about her good deeds. We secretly called her secretary. She could not list them all either.

Time allows me to mention only a few. We do know she has worked tirelessly for the Guardian Angel Settlement Kitchen Pantry and Lafayette Industries -- a wonderful program employing mentally challenged and physically disabled adults.

I know she has helped many to get an education and supported others through serious difficulties. I do not know the numbers.

One year when I was returning to my oncology work at the University Munich, she put a check in my pocket. As with all the other seeds she has planted, that program is still running today and has helped hundreds of cancer patients she has never seen.

Jacqueline has also raised four wonderful children and has six grandchildren.

I have barely touched on the results of Jacqueline's gracious, giving heart. But I am sure that she, a fifth generation Sacred Heart alumna, is the kind of woman St. Madeleine Sophie, St. Rose Philippine, her dear Sister McNally, and all the Religious of the Sacred Heart hoped we would become - warm, compassionate, deeply spiritual, and making the world a better place - a living example of what it means to do everything très, très bien. They would be proud of her, as we her classmates are.
